Description

Designed from the waist up, issuing from undulating folds of fabric, the pleated robe with deep collar, holding a banner.

Extant English roof angels occur predominantly in East Anglian churches, especially in the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk. Stylistically however, this angel relates to a group of twenty-two roof angels on a false-hammerbeam roof, the refectory, Cleeve Abbey, Somerset. Records indicate the roof was constructed during a program of improvement under Abbot David Juyner (elected 1435). Of particular note is the similar up and back swept hair, whereas the East Anglian examples tend to range between cone-ringlets and wavy-curly. Some of the Cleeve Abbey examples also hold a banner with one finger or thumb protruding over the front in the same manner.

Almost certainly from the same interior scheme as item number 3077.

Provenance: Jonathan Horne Collection.
